Building of the eighteenth century, it is situated between St. Fosca's Church and its bell tower. This one crashed in 1410, for a violent whirlwind and it was immediately rebuilt in the seem we observe nowadays. It was rebuilt higher than before, while the whole cell was built ex-novo; it is open by wide double lancet windows, pointed stone arches, ended by a little copper cupola and typical gothic corner aedicules.

The Church, whose origins are maybe connected with the translation of the Saint in Torcello, in the tenth century, was built in 1597, in 1679 was demolished and rebuilt, while about fifty years later the Church was damaged by a fire and it was restored ending in 1741.
